A personal representative is someone the law lets make health care decisions for the patient. Within that authority, we treat them as the patient for the patient's health information. Our other forms call this person a legal representative.

This is often a health care power of attorney, a guardian, the parent of a child, or the person in charge of the estate of someone who has died.

Ends (if known): _____

Please bring a copy of the paper that gives this authority, such as the power of attorney or the court order. We keep a copy in the patient's record.

For a child, some care the child can agree to alone may stay private, as state law allows. Then the parent may not see those records.

If you only want us to talk with a family member or friend, you do not need this form: use our Communication Preferences form. To send records to someone, use our Release of Information form.
