Your rights

You may revoke (cancel) this authorization at any time by writing to _____. This does not undo anything already released because of it. The Notice of Privacy Practices explains how.

Signing is your choice. Your treatment, payment, enrollment or eligibility for benefits will not depend on whether you sign. The one exception is care given only to make information for someone else, such as an exam an employer or insurer asked for: we may need your signature before we give that care.

Information released under this authorization may be disclosed again by the person who receives it. It may then no longer be protected by federal privacy law. You will be given a copy of this authorization.
